To the Curator of the Museum

Sir

Having Read in the English newspapers an account of your purchase of Phoebus Apollo from the Site of the Roman Forum

I Beg with your permission to offer you a wonderful piece of Sculpture of the ancient Greek Art - It is the Goddess Aurora Riding in a Chariot of Clouds and driving the four Horses of the Sun which Represents the Hours in their swiftness - The Horses are broken off and perhaps destroyed - The Emperor Constantine of Rome Ordered all the Heathen Temples to be destroyed - But the singular Beauty and wonderful correctness of nature Forbade the Axe or the Hammer from demolishing into fragments a work of Art which It is possible the world has no Parallel - The ancient Remains of Ephesus are frightfully maimed and destroyed - Phoebus Apollo is possibly from the same Hand that Sculptured the Goddess and It would be a pity to part them
If this is so - I Believe the Sculptor to be Praxiteles the famous Greek Statuary and about 3500 years old - Pope and Couper say Homer flourished 907 B.C. - The Heroes of Homer must have lived at least 5 or 6 Hundred years before

Or He could not have Racited their Seeds In the Iliad - There Is also a Marble Roman Sword Hundle Keined Green probably Used By Caesars Army In Invading Britain - A Times Newspaper with a Remarkable Defence Of a Lady Dated 1791 - 3 Very ancient Knives and forks with Silver Hundles and very Curious - The Whole Of them may Be purchased for One Thousand Guineas Please Telegram Or Appoint An Agent to See them If Required - Please to Apply My Letter to the above address -

Faithfully Yours
Thomas Keenan.

Referred to Curator

Washington, D.C.
September 23rd 1873.

Gentlemen:

Noticing some weeks ago a statement made in one of the city papers to the effect that you intended to establish a "School of Design" in connection with the "Art Gallery," we have waited anxiously, hoping to hear something authoritative and definite on the subject; not having done so we venture to address you this note. We are confident you are fully aware of the great advantages and need of such an institution in this city, which is entirely destitute of anything of the kind, but an expression of our earnest wish for such a school can do no harm if it has no good result.

We hope that if you find it consistent with the best interests of your institution, and it is in your power to do so, that you will establish a night school for the teaching of "free hand drawing", at an early date, by which you would confer a permanent benefit to us individually and to which we pledge our earnest support.

Respectfully asking your earnest consideration of this matter we remain

Your obedient servants
To the Trustees of the Corcoran Art Association.

History. It was brought to New York at the close of the last Century by a French woman, who procured it during the troubles of the Revolution. A member of my family, who had occasion to see her on law business, procured it from her its history, and made at her death, its existence being unknown, purchased it at the sale of her effects.

Description. There are three figures. The Dorketress is in Court dress, taken attempting to wash a blackamore face white, to show her sense of the difficulty of her repentance. At the right hand, Cupid is drawing a veil over the face of a marble lion at the fountain - an allegory. Cupid blinding the lion.

The hands particularly are very beautiful.

price. It was formerly put in New York at 12000. I put it now (as I am out of the way) at 10,000 (gold). This is exactly what is now given for little pictures of Menzies (?) 18 inches long and which are plentiful.

This is a <sup>single</sup> picture and probably the only chance there might be of procuring a <sup>second</sup> one. Being the only known portrait of Talier, I have been frequently told that, if sent to Paris, the Directors of the Louvre would pay a large price for it. I do not wish the risk of this. I have no one there to whom to consign it.

I forgot to mention, that like almost all his pictures, it is said to have been painted for the private Collection of Louis XIV.

Warrior on ruins of Carthage

There is but one other picture by Vanderlyn, his Adrienne, except his public portraits like Washington in Hall of Representatives. His Landing of Columbus in the

Portrait of Louise de la Vallée

Artist. Charles le Brun

Born in Paris in 1619. Died 1698. Court painter to Louis XIV.

Founder and first member of the French Academy of Arts. (He is not to be confounded with Madame le Brun who lived a century later.)

His series of pictures, the Battles of Alexander and his entrance into Babylon &c, are well known, in the Louvre. Most of his pictures (as may be seen by the Catalogue of the Louvre) were painted for the private collection of Louis XIV. This is the only le Brun in America and the only one I know outside of the Louvre.

in the Rotunda was mostly painted (as he told me himself in Paris) by a clever French artist.

It took the gold medal (which goes with the picture) at the Louvre in 1807, from 1200 pictures by European Artists. Napoleon I, tried to buy it of the Louvre.

There is a full history of it in the "Atlantic Monthly" - Feb. 1867 - the article - "Recollections of John Vanderlyn".

Price $20,000, as one of the most celebrated historical pictures in the Country this is not high, when Bierstadt is getting $20,000 for <sup>some of</sup> his his landscapes. of which he may paint hundreds yet.
